NEXT WEEK: THE WORLD-FAMOUS COMEDY

"BLITHE SPIRIT"

ABOUT NEXT WEEK'S PLAY

It is fairly safe to say that 'Blithe Spirit' has become about the most successful and best known of Noel Coward's plays.

It opened at the Piccadilly Theatre in 1941 with a most distinguished cast including Kay Hammond, Cecil Parker, Fay Compton and Margaret Rutherford, and even throughout the dark days of the war it played to packed houses and smashed all previous records. It has since been played at every theatre in the country, and its brilliant dialogue and amusing wit has never failed to leave audiences helpless with laughter.

The story of 'Blithe Spirit' is now well-known, the tale of the man who, having lost his first wife, marries again and is quite happy until a somewhat eccentric spiritualist holds a seance at his house (this scene is one of the highlights of the comedy) and it is after this seance that his first wife materializes and the fun becomes fast and furious until the final curtain.

If you have never seen 'Blithe Spirit' then now is the chance to become acquainted with one of the funniest comedies of the English stage—if you have seen it then of course you will want to see it again.
