ABOUT NEXT WEEK'S PLAY

"WUTHERING HEIGHTS." In response to so many requests from patrons the management have decided to present The Court Players in this great classic from the pen of Emily Bronte.

The version we are presenting has been adapted for the stage by John Davison, and after its London production A. E. Wilson of "The Star" wrote: "This play has the same savage power and attraction as the novel."

Himself a Northcountry man John Davison has managed in remarkable manner to convey the atmosphere of the book to the stage. The Bronte family appears to have had a special fascination for him, for another of his most successful plays—"The Bronte's of Haworth Parsonage" deals with the lives of the sisters and their brother Branwell.

The literary minded reader need not be told that Wuthering Heights is melodrama, pure, grim, and unalloyed, without any heartsick sentiment.
