ABOUT NEXT WEEK'S PLAY

"SLEEPING OUT" is a comedy written about incidents of the early part of the war: the black-out, the evacuation of businesses from London, the search for suitable premises in the country and, by no means least, the round-up of aliens. So we find the firm of Tunbridge, Todd & Co., publishers, decide to remove their premises from London to a bungalow away from the bombs.

The trouble is, however, that the two partners discuss the move in the presence of their respective wives, and the two ladies learn that the "business" includes the firm's female secretary.

To describe the scenes at the bungalow after "the move" would be to give away the fun. It must suffice to say that when Gipsy Dainton, the secretary, puts in an appearance, the partners cannot be blamed for wanting her there. For Gipsy turns out to be the most charming, glamorous and mischievous young person, ready for almost any devilment calculated to lead the most exemplary of publishers from the path of virtue.

Scene follows scene packed with extravagant drollery, and the whole cast becomes involved in a gay and merry tangle, the unravelling of which is explosive with laughter.

"Sleeping Out" may be warmly recommended to everyone.

DOEL LUSCOMBE

Doel Luscombe entered the profession at the age of 14 years — serving his apprenticeship at the famous Plymouth Repertory Theatre, he has worked in all branches of the theatre including Revue, Music Hall and even "Fit-ups" where they performed a different play each evening. Doel spends most of the day and night in the Theatre — but endeavours to find an hour or two to amuse his three children. His ambition is to do something really big in the Theatre. His hobbies — trying to lead a family life. His chief dislike — temperamental actors or actresses: 90 per cent. mental, 10 per cent. temper.

NEWS FLASH!—George Woolley has had a very strenuous year and is taking two or three weeks' rest. We look forward to his return.

Austin Steele is back from holiday this week, bronzed and fit. (Won't say where he found the sun!)
