Jane Burch was the wife of Professor Philip Burch who died in 1987, and a scientist in her own right, specialising in teaching. Jane Ramsey was the eldest daughter of Frank and Lettice Ramsey. She and Philip R.J. Burch were married at Cambridge where she was born and where in 1949 she completed her PhD in Biochemistry before moving to Leeds. Like her husband, she spent her entire career there.

In 1989 she published "The Biological Basis Of Disease" with her colleague Susan Chesters, a Festschrift of her late husband's papers.

Although she retired in 1991, she volunteered with the Citizens Advice Bureau in Leeds, something she continued until a few months before her death. She was survived by two sons and a daughter, and four grandchildren.

The attached photograph was apparently taken by her mother Lettice in 1946 and was kindly supplied by her son Stephen.
