It had to happen, the madness that began with the posthumous crucifixion of Jimmy Savile has turned into a juggernaut that is now devouring itself. A woman named Esther Baker has come forward, and in an exclusive interview with Sky News claims to have been abused during the 1980s. And 1990s. Nothing unbelievable about that you may say, certainly not in view of the recent conviction of Ray Teret.

What is a tad unusual though is that this woman claims to have been sexually abused not by a wicked stepfather but by a politician – someone who is still very much alive and active – and police officers, sometimes in uniform, among others. And where was she abused? In the great outdoors of Staffordshire. In spite of the attention heaped on this woman by both Sky News and the police, it is clear she is a nutter. Why?

The corruption of the police in the UK, the US and most likely everywhere else is a wonder to behold. There are few things the police won't cover up or attempt to cover up, as the Ian Tomlinson case proved, failure that it was. The days of police taking backhanders and dispensing wanton brutality are largely gone thanks to improved pay and conditions, PACE, and not least people like you walking around with mobile phones in their pockets. They know we're watching them too, so if they don't remain firmly on the straight and narrow they risk losing that fat pension. Are we though seriously being asked to believe that serving police officers would take part in a coven along with at least one MP and other powerful people?

The investigation currently underway should begin with this woman's medical records. Let's recap some of the nonsense we've been fed recently: the Hampstead Satanic abuse hoax – the police were on the ball with that one (or perhaps they were part of the plot?); the trashing of the late Leon Brittan and the at best exaggerated claims about Greville Janner; the continuing fantasies about Elm Guest House; the fantasies of Richard Kerr who claims to have been in the thick of it as a boy...at one time the police wouldn't have tolerated this rubbish, but today anytime a survivor claims she (or increasingly he) was abused, heck, victims should be believed. Expect Miss Baker to be exposed very soon (in the mildest possible terms) or more likely for her to be quietly forgotten as the next big scare story comes along.
