Check out this video, which nowadays comes with the customary trigger warning. How would you interpret it? That depends on who you are. If you were a racist – bore, bore – you might interpret it as an act of black savagery. If you were an older person, you might interpret it as a sign of youthful folly. Even though the attacker is clearly not a teenager, his actions might remind you of the time when as a teenage delinquent you vandalised a bus stop or broke a shop window just for the hell of it, although you would never go so far as to attack a human being like that, much less an innocent teenage girl.

If you were a feminist, you would undoubtedly blame this attack on VAW – ie violence against women – the result of millennia of oppression by the mythical patriarchy. And if you were a Moslem, you might interpret it as an Islamophobic attack, which is how The Independent newspaper is currently trying to portray it. Now throw the agendas in the dustbin and focus on what really happened. The perpetrator is a Nigeria named Michael Ayoade, and he attacked his victim, Tasneem Kabir, because he said she did not have a friendly face. When he appeared at Thames Magistrates' Court, his lawyer said in mitigation: "He has drunk since he was 16 and smokes up to 10 joints a day which in my submission is excessive and perhaps this causes some degree of paranoia and low self esteem".

In other words, this was a man who was off his head; his victim may count herself lucky, because sometimes people like this don't simply assault strangers, they murder them. People like Hannah Bonser who in February 2012 stabbed a 13 year old girl in the stomach as they passed in a park because...

All this begs the question, why did The Independent newspaper use this footage in an article about Islamophobic hate crime? The truth is The Independent is anything independent, for whatever reason it wants to swamp the UK with even more refugees and migrants, and is therefore using this real crime but fake hate crime to try to generate sympathy for the idea.

A much better idea would be for the UK to say no to anymore migrants, and to kick out not only those who are here illegally, but those undesirables who attack innocent people. Migrants like Michael Ayoade.
