

I'm Sure I Saw A Girl Like You Before

By Alexander Baron - Sep 18, 2015

4
SHARES

In 1896, the black songwriter Ernest Hogan came up with his biggest hit: All Coons Look Alike To Me. Although such a song wouldn't go down well in this era of political correctness, it is not only black men who all look alike; whatever your sex, race, age or size, somewhere out there your body double is walking around, and at times this gives the conspiracy crowd fodder to feed their supposedly so enlightened followers.

Earlier this month, the WafflesAtNoon website reported on a story said to be going the rounds about a woman who was photographed at the sites of three domestic terror outrages: Sandy Hook, the Boston Marathon and the Aurora shooting. The story by the in-house team speaks for itself, this crying woman was in fact three entirely different, and identified, women, but this is far from the first time something like this has happened.

Back in September 1995, the magazine Soldier Of Fortune published a photograph of a BATF agent who bore a striking physical resemblance to Timothy McVeigh, who earlier that year had carried out the Oklahoma City bombing outrage. It is easy to see how this resemblance could have been and probably was exploited by the mendacious and swallowed by the gullible.

At times, an amazing similarity can have tragic consequences. Ten years ago, the Australian tourist Newton Thompson was murdered in his London hotel room, apparently because he bore a striking resemblance to a convicted paedophile, while in the same city a hundred years earlier, a man named Adolf Beck suffered the indignity of being mistaken not once but twice for the same con man. It was Beck's false conviction that led to the institution of the Court of Appeal, so perhaps in that case something good came of it. Just remember though, next time a flatterer says he's never met a girl like you before, he's probably lying, or if he hasn't, somebody has.

4

SHARES