If the name Bahar Mustafa is not familiar to you, she is the dumb belle who landed herself in hot water in May of this year by using the Twitter hashtag #killallwhitemen. It is difficult to believe anyone would take this literally or indeed anything she says seriously. Unfortunately for her, someone, not necessarily a white man, appears to have complained, and as the British police like easy targets, with Operation Midland about to go belly up after one elderly (albeit homosexual) white man handed them a dose of public humble pie, they have decided that young, non-white women are also fair game, and as there is no reasonable doubt about her having done the thing of which she stands accused, there are good odds she will be convicted.

There are some reports that she has been arrested, but as she has been summonsed for sending a malicious communication, that seems unlikely. She has though been questioned under caution, and will appear at Bromley Magistrates Court on November 5. Rather ironic really as it is usually a Catholic traitor rather than a demented witch who is put on the bonfire on said date.

The Malicious Communications Act is a pernicious catch-all piece of legislation that was introduced in 1988. It is said that the MP responsible for it had an even more pernicious motive. One of his constituents was in the habit of sending him defamatory letters. Defamation requires publication to a third party, so it is not a tort to brand a man a mass murderer in a letter addressed to him. The Malicious Communications Act removes that inconvenience, now if the recipient claims to have suffered “anxiety or distress” upon reading said missive, and can convince a magistrate of that, a crime has been made out.

Doubtless we will now see some poor soul, perhaps even a police officer, coming forward to tell the court and the world how distressed and anxious he became on reading Miss Mustafa’s tweet. We may even hear that he spent a month off work with post-traumatic stress disorder. Perhaps this will be included in his victim impact statement.

Ludicrous though this is, women – and men – of Miss Mustafa’s persuasion, if not the lady herself, have lauded this sort of tyranny when used against racists; now they and in particular she are about to learn that tyranny cuts both ways. That could be why she has been keeping a low profile these days; she has not commented on her Facebook page since September 3. No doubt she will not be quite so silent when she attends Bromley court next month. Wouldn’t it be ironic if a few white knights turned up to cheer her on? Before you do guys, one word of warning, the lady has no interest in white knights, or knights of any colour for that matter.
