In August this year, Marie Black was convicted of unspeakable crimes against the young. The following month she was given the kind of sentence reserved for the worst kind of sexual predators. While the usual suspects have expressed their satisfaction with the jury's verdicts, not everyone is taken in by the claim that a paedophile ring that organised poker games to decide how and by whom its young victims would be abused was organised by a woman, and that five other members of this imaginary ring were also female.

Because of the hysteria that surrounds child abuse cases – real and imagined – there has been very little reporting of this one, and with the exception of one mainstream newspaper correspondent, no critical reporting at all. Now, in a letter from prison, Black herself points out that the expert evidence of Professor Martin Conway was excluded by the judge.

She is currently appealing against conviction and sentence, and no fewer than three MPs are looking at the case.

Marie Black is currently being held at HMP Bronzefield, Woodthorpe Road, Ashford, Middlesex TW15 3JZ, England.
