If you haven't heard of Stefan Molyneux, he runs what he claims is the world's largest Libertarian radio station, Freedomain Radio, which was founded in 2005. This claim is almost certainly true; to date he has close to two thousand videos on YouTube. Born in the Irish Republic, he is domiciled in Canada from where he rants continually about the evils of government. He covers too a wide variety of other subjects such as toxic women, media myths, and mass shootings. It is fair to say that Mr Molyneux is a Marmite sort of person, either you love him or you hate him.

While it is possible to agree or disagree amicably with much of his analysis of both current and historical events, he has upset many people with his views on personal relationships, something called defooing. This has led to claims that he is the leader of a cult; whether or not that claim is true, he has a long way to go to challenge someone who is as crazy as Alexia Thomas or as duplicitous as Teal Swan.

Although his analysis of feminism is spot on, including the ludicrous concept of rape culture, he takes the pendulum to the other extreme, using the same kind of absurd statistics rad-fems use, only instead of universalising rape he universalises parental abuse, which is, he says, dispensed largely by mothers.

Whether or not he is a shameless liar as far as his personal life and the activities of his wife are concerned, you might like to check out Freedomain Radio. You don't have to agree with everything he says, but his facts and analyses are often spot on.
