On June 6, a conference will be held at Goldsmith's College in South East London. Entitled Searching for Satan: Miscarriages of memory, fractured families and Satanic panics, this may sound amusing or even frivolous, alas, it is anything but. Anyone who doubts there are people who believe Satan is alive and well on planet Earth should check out some of the ludicrous but frightening videos uploaded to YouTube by proponents of this centuries old conspiracy.

Even those who do not necessarily believe in Satan himself, believe his servants are not only alive and well but sexually abusing, torturing and even murdering young children and babies in bizarre rituals not in some "primitive" African banana republic but in England, 2015, the country that was at the heart of the Industrial Revolution. Scotland isn't left out either, as evinced by the Hollie Greig case. The speakers include Barbara Hewson and Kevin Felstead.

Miss Hewson is a barrister who unlike most of her profession does not hesitate to court controversy outside the courtroom. While her suggestion that the age of consent should be lowered to 13 is misguided and wrong, she is spot on with her criticisms of the Operation Yewtree witch-hunt and the ludicrous convictions that have resulted. She will be reviewing inter alia the recent Hampstead Satanic abuse case.

Kevin Felstead brings a personal dimension to the conference. His sister Carol was found dead in June 2005; she is believed to have committed suicide. Although suicide is a surprisingly common cause of death, few people take their own lives because they believe they have been the victims of Satanic abuse.

Details of the Carole Felstead case can be found on the dedicated website, and details of the conference including booking arrangements can currently be found here.
