ANOTHER COUNTRY

BY JULIAN MITCHELL

What would lead a man to betray his country? What would lead a boy to betray his friends? In Julian Mitchell's award-winning Another Country, which won an Olivier Award for Play of the Year and helped launch the careers of Kenneth Branagh, Daniel Day-Lewis, Rupert Everett and Colin Firth, these questions become fatally entwined.

Another Country follows a company of public schoolboys through a summer term in the early 1930s where Bennett and Judd are both outsiders; one coming to terms with his sexuality, the other already a committed Marxist. But the Establishment has traditional ways of dealing with rebels and when a scandal rocks the school, the young men must confront their beliefs and make choices which will have a momentous impact on their lives and on the future of their country.

Another Country balances subtle wit and thought-provoking drama in a fictionalised account of the youth of such people as the spy Guy Burgess and the Communist John Cornford, who died in the Spanish Civil War.

Another Country is directed by Jeremy Herrin, whose credits Uncle Vanya and South Downs (Chichester Festival Theatre and the West End), That Face (Royal Court Theatre), This House (National Theatre) Much Ado About Nothing (The Globe) as well as the forthcoming Wolf Hall and the recent Bring Up the Bodies for the RSC.
